SEED GRAINS

Write for prices when in the market.

Marquis Spring Wheat. The heaviest yielding spring wheat grown in the Northwest. Heads are beardless, chaff smooth and kernel dark amber in color. Very heavy and grades as hard wheat.

Kinney Wheat. An old standard wheat that has been grown for years here and always produces a good crop. May be sown either fall or spring.

White Winter Wheat. This is the favorite variety for this section of the valley especially for the prairie and lower lands. Planted in fall and early winter.

White Holland Wheat. This variety is becoming very popular and has proven a very good variety. Plant in fall and early winter.

Red Oats. This variety is becoming more popular each year and is a good yielder and makes a first class hay. Sow in late spring.

Kanato Oats. This oat has proven satisfactory for certain types of soil. A heavy yielder and produces a good grain, also good hay. Sow both fall and spring.

Black Spring Oats. A very heavy producer on certain types of soil.

White Hulless Oats. Sow in the spring about April or early May. Produces a heavy oat without a hull. Fine feed. Lb. postpaid, 15c; not postpaid, 100 lbs. $4.00.

Gray Oats. Sown both fall and early spring and the standard oat for this valley and western Washington and Oregon.

White Oats. Have some very choice seed oats of this well known variety, clean and fine quality.

Spring Rye. Makes a good crop sown in the spring.

Fall Rye. Always makes a crop and can be sown on poor land that will not raise other grain. Makes an abundance of pasture and green feed and also a fine cover crop for orchards and berries.

Hanchean Spring Barley. Usually does best on light land but is grown nearly everywhere.

Fall Barley. Barley is being planted in the fall and has proven very productive. The acreage has increased several hundred percent the last year and farmers are well satisfied with the results.

Trebi Barley. A six row barley that is a heavy producer.

Cheat Seed. Recleaned. This is used as a hay crop especially on wet lands and when cut and taken care of at the right time makes a good hay.

Canada Field Peas. Field peas are becoming more popular every year. They make a good hay; make a great hog feed and are used for silos.

Austrian Peas. This is the new variety that is being sown in the valley the past few years. Makes an immense amount of hay or green feed. Also a fine ensilage. Also used as a cover crop and from tests made is possibly the finest of all the cover crops as it carries more nitrogen than any other plant so used.

VETCHES

Oregon Vetch (Common Vetch). One of the best forage plants grown on the Pacific Coast. It furnishes an abundance of green, makes a fine hay; used for silos, pasture, and is unexcelled as a cover crop.

Hungarian Vetch. This is proving a wonderful vetch; it seems to be adapted for land too heavy and wet for common vetch; is aphid proof; seems to stand more freezing than other vetches and is very productive. Can be used for all purposes that common vetch is used for with the assurance of making a crop when other vetches are a failure.

Sand or Hairy Vetch. This thrives on poor, arid, sandy soil, but will grow anywhere. Is a winter vetch and should be planted in fall when to be cut for crop or seed. Can be seeded in spring for pasture.

Vetch and Oats. This is a mixture prepared for hay and is the usual mixture sown in this valley. Consists of re-cleaned grey winter oats and Oregon vetch. Write for prices.
